Smallwood followed and Johnson following the three. I went down stairs and argued with him," Johnson testified. The men returned to the house, and after Smallwood had pushed Johnson into the room, Johnson struck the revolver from the other hand. Before Smallwood released the weapon it discharged, however, and as Johnson headed up as if shot in the brain" members of the family thought he had been hit. Johnson explained here this week.

needed to the Senate Public Works Committee on November 28, 1951, a final review of the report on the Big Sandy River printed in House Document 298, 80th Congress, 2d press. This review was made particularly with a view to revising the estimated costs and benefits of the proposed improvement in order to reflect current conditions. As a result of this review, it was found that the estimated costs of the project had increased greatly while monetary benefits had increased only slightly and prospective construction had decreased. The resulting in an unfavorable ratio of benefits to costs. The Chief of Engineers in the conclusion of the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors that the proposed improvement is not warranted or advisable at this time. In accordance with the provisions of Executive Order No. 9848, the report was submitted to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget for review who advised the Secretary of the Army on August 6, 1951, that authorization of the improvement would not be in accord with my program at this time.

"I recognize your great interest in the proposed canalization of the Big Sandy river and its tributaries. I also appreciate the fact that such water resource development projects contribute to our economic growth and build our defensive strength. However, I know you will agree that, particularly during these times of restrictive budget limitations, only those civil public construction projects which are clearly justified economically, are shown to be feasible on the defensive effort, can be completed in time to assist our present mobilization program should be undertaken. In the absence of conclusive findings that the Big Sandy River project meets these qualifications, I do not feel justified in classifying the improvement as essential at this time.

Floyd Soldier's Job Is Ticklish Business Of Patrol Missions

Shown here against a rugged mountain background in Korea are Efc. Richard Harmon (holding carbine), son of Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Harmon, of Wayland, and Herman "Doc" Roberts, advisor of this county, both members of the 170th regiment, 45th infantry division.

Efc. Harmon has been on almost every patrol sent out by his company, and one of these ventures into the Korean No-Man's Land was the subject of a recent feature story in Stars and Stripes.

The patrol—Harmon, four others and their leader, Sgt. Leon J. Whitaker left their company headquarters about 4:30 a.m., and before daybreak had taken concealed positions only 300 yards from a demarcated area from one bunker and 20 into No-Man's Land, lying between two formidable ridges. They hid in the underbrush.

Sgt. Whitaker tells the story: "About 11 a.m., there was rifle fire and a short burst from an automatic weapon. It might have been a sneak fire for the firing had hardly stopped when smoke started coming from what we thought were enemy snipers all around us. We knew our positions weren't known, or they'd never have started those fires. So we just decided to stick around and see what we could see."

"It wasn't long before the Americans knew the enemy was around. On the opposite ridge, within easy view without the aid of field glasses, they saw three Chinese soldiers emerge from one bunker and go into another. Then only about 120 yards from where the six patrol-members had a enemy soldier stepped from a bunker and threw out a pan of water.

"It's about the strangest feeling I ever had," said Whitaker, "being right there within a stone's throw of the guys who are out to kill you—yet knowing they can't see you."

General chairman and master of ceremonies will be James Saltsburg. The incomplete list of others heard in various phases of work are: Vice-chairmen, arrangements, Bill Reynolds, Jr., treasurer and budget; Wade, Mahood, finance and funds; Silas Tackett, advertising and stage; Dennis Halbert, wardrobe; Lenora Osborne, organization and publicity; Mrs. Edgar R. May, city council; Mayor E. P. Griggley; American Legion, Debra Taylor; Women's Club, Mrs. Wm. Stintner; First Club, Martin, high; Don Frasure; Home Ec. Club, Martin; high; Dorcha Allen; grounds and landscaping; Clarence King, chairman and auditing; Missouri; Vountiers here include W. P. Bradford, cardbord; Eddie Greer, Hawley and Parlie Flannery for sand; Wayne Hazzard, lumber; Dan Prater, Billie Mayo, Berlin Osborn, rocks, plus others not yet appointed, seen or asked; stage properties, last week he had accompanied Mrs. Johnson and Helen to Prestonsburg; and had returned home with them. After dark, he continued, Smallwood entered, first going to Mr. Johnson's room, then entering the dining room and announcing he was going to make a change. He told me," Mollitt stated. "I was sorry and wouldn't have been if it hadn't been up there, even if it had held up for me and said if he didn't like the way we were doing he would be the one to leave."

Thereseon Smallwood pulled his revolver at it at the same time saying, "You don't believe I will do it," Mollitt said. Mollitt added that that was when he ran, leaving the kitchen door and running around the house. He heard the shot, he testified, when about halfway around the building. Victim of the shot is survived by her parents, four brothers and one sister, Bobby Gene, Donald Gene, William Edwin, and Ernest. Burial rites were conducted Saturday from the home at Melvin of her grandfather, D. J. Mullins. Funeral rites were made in the family cemetery on Riley's Branch, Green's Funeral Home directing.

Brainard - Large crowds are attending the revival here. We are glad to have the people from Eastsville, Pres-21, had been in the recipient of the Purple Heart. We are advised by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Miles M. May, of Albion, Ky. At the time, Capt. May received his wound, King others were also wounded.

Prestonsburg Native, Former Floyd Teacher, Succumbs at Berea, Ky.

George J. Neal, 72 years old, native of Prestonsburg, and one-time Floyd county teacher, died Saturday night at Berea of a heart attack. Mr. Neal was a merchant at Berea. He was a son of the late Dr. Henry Francis Neal who was one of Stonewall Jackson's men in the Civil War. A teacher in this county, much of the time on Johns Creek, from 1899 to 1907, he served as county examiner during the tenure of the late H. F. Patton. He also was an instructor at Eastern State College. Mr. Neal left Prestonsburg to enter the coal business in Harlan county, and in 1923 bought a farm near Winchester, a few years later going to Berea. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Lucile, Caywood Neal, two sons, Samuel and Joseph Neal, and a daughter, Mrs. Mollie Hatcher, Portsmouth, Ohio.

Richmond's PRESTONSBURG, KY. Hays Bill Planned To Aid Dr. Bentley Gets Senate Approval The Senate has approved a bill of Senator Doug Hays, Democrat, McDowell, that would pave the way for G. C. Bentley, Pikeville, to practice dentistry legally in Kentucky. It now has gone to the House for action. Bentley was a student at the University of Louisville in 1967, was discharged on the eve of graduation without a diploma. Later, he practiced in the profession in Arkansas, then returned to Eastern Kentucky. The Bentley dental license has been before each session of the General Assembly since 1946. The 1946 session passed a resolution authorized him to practice but the Courts held it invalid. The proposed law would license anyone who has practiced forty years and who, prior to that time, completed two years of work at a recognized college of dentistry.

STATE MEET UNDER WAY

Floyd Net Fans Back Pikeville, Hindman, In State Tourney

Although Floyd county is not represented in the state high school tournament which began in Memorial Coliseum, Lexington, Wednesday night, many residents of working ages were missing at the 16 lives of the Commonwealth began firing away for the title.
Fans from this section were there to root for Pikeville, Hindman and the 15th regional touring and Hindman, the winner only in the first. Pikeville met Bardonia this morning (Thursday) at 10 a.m. and Hindman's first game of the state was with Newport, this afternoon.
Martin, a tenacious and outstanding Pikeville smooth-working Panther, fell in the first round of the regional, 15 to 62, despite Paul Grigsby's sensational performance with 27 points before fouling out early in the fourth quarter. Highly regarded here was up next for Pikeville as Billy Wheeler, Panther center, with 31 points led his team to a 77-54 victory.
Oil Springs upset a favored Bell County five which was off form in the semi-finals, but was never in the finals against Pikeville. The Panthers won, 77-54.
The lone game cost Pikeville the services of Butcher, stellar player and the team enters the state below par.
Hindman, a perennial regional threat, and a regular visitor to Lexington at state tournament, handily defeated Hazard for the right to make this year's trip for a shot at the state title.
Two Martin players, Pete Grigsby and Ronald Tackett, won places on the all-regional team. Other members of the all-star five are Wheeler, McCoy and Phillips of Pikeville; Cassidy and Williams of Inez; Conley of Oil Springs; Ingersoll of Phelps and Bercher of Meade Memorial.
A survey of telephone service is being made in East county to determine the needs and wants of farm people.

Jap Clover, Depression-Hit, Is Replaced by Broom Sedge

Common legumes, or Japanese clover has almost disappeared from Floyd county fields and roadsides and in searching for the reason for its disappearance a person is often introduced, if he had no previous acquaintance, to the science of entomology. This science treats of vital factors in nature. The term was coined by Haeckel, a celebrated German biologist in 1878. While and Haeckel says ecology is "the study of the laws of nature coming into being."

Japanese clover was first seen in America at Monticello, Georgia in 1840. By 1870 it was a common rough plant in Georgia but it took the Civil War to accelerate its spread to all parts of the South. The Southern government had blockaded the Southern ports and with international commerce was barred on by the South. There was a price necessity for a hardy, drawn away the leaders of the Confederacy began to import hay from England and other places in the East. The hay carrying ships had to run the gauntlet of the northern frigates but some of them would get through. The hay that did not go to the southern armies was carried all over the south. Wherever it was fed to the horses and mules, the seed was deposited for its germination. These feeding places served as the nucleus of the wide-spread covers of Japanese clover in the south.

It will grow on an acid soil. The attachment for acid soil was the reason it settled upon the hillsides and sun-baked points. Here it reproduced itself and continued to spread. It was not until the early 1900s that these dry areas of depression, when wind and a few birds found it necessary to plow the Japanese clover points and put in in for alfalfa.

The years preceding 1900 were not years of phenomenal population growth in the Big Sandy. There was still ample agricultural land for those who wanted to engage in this method of earning a livelihood. There were the rich acres and the bottom. From these he could earn an agricultural competence. But then the Great Depression. The farmer had heretofore been able to earn from industry a welcome addition to his income. Now the opportunity to so earn the needed supplement was gone and he expanded his crop land. Another factor entered here also. This was the great number of those who had heretofore depended upon mining or mining dependent occupations for a living but now, in order to feed themselves turned to agriculture. This group, as a rule, plowed up and seeded the less desirable land. The legumes or Japanese clover covered points were tortured with the plow and the depression hit and amateur farmer did not know he was now disturbing the balance of nature. For years this optimistic plowing and scarring of sterile hillsides went on and at the end of the Great Depression, when industry again was beckoning, common legumes or Japanese clover was practically extinct. It survived in only isolated places, where the desperate and amateur plowmen disdained to cultivate.

When the plowing and scarring was over why didn't this common legume return? It did not return for the simple reason that a viable, adaptable and wind-borne seed plant stepped in and colonized the naked soil before the slower moving legume could re-assert itself. This was broom sedge. Today this plant is found on many a farm that had little or none years ago. Some haters of it even affirm it is losing its destination for nitrogen and humus and is thus threatening their rich fields.

Today not enough Japanese clover seeded spots are extant to accelerate its recovery here in Floyd county. While the slow, but inevitable and inexorable laws of nature are

KENTUCKY ON THE MARCH

By EWING GALLOWAY

As you would expect, the opposition to compulsory liability insurance is pretty business. The companies say it is nothing more than a tax on the pockets of the insured. Their side of the argument is presented in a recent issue of the Business Week magazine is about 100 percent correct. While the proponents of compulsory liability insurance have no thought but to protect people who may be crippled or killed or orphaned by uninsured motor vehicles.

The companies that compulsory insurance would force state governments to try to pass rate down.

Compulsory insurance might eliminate competition between private companies by forcing rates down and one company would eat all the business. Then too, it might make victims of accidents more claim conscious.

In states that have "responsibility" laws a large percentage of the cars are already insured. "Responsibility" means that the car owner loses his driving license until he is able to make out private companies for damages. So why, the companies argue, should a relatively small group be compelled to insure?

And they say car owners in Massachusetts, which has compulsory insurance, carry less protection than they do in other states.

Still another objection by the companies is based on fear, the state will go into liability insurance without making out private companies by underselling them.

The foregoing are the main facts about the opposition of compulsory insurance. I have tried to be fair in looking it down to fit the space.

Now let's look at the other side—the side of the people who have lost wives, husbands, children, or have been forced to spend the rest of their lives in wheel chairs or on crutches. Or children who are brought up in orphanages.

Every citizen of Kentucky is entitled to justice from accident or property injury when he ventures out on the public roads.

I can't help thinking of one venture on Webster county who were crippled for life and two who were killed outright in a crash with an uninsured car. The surviving cripples made no effort to act damages. The driver of the uninsured car had nothing.

Cases similar to the General Assembly who reads his local newspapers.

Also, every member of the Legislature now knows the price is granted to insurance companies in Kentucky carry responsibilities to the public. Their business involve more than just making money.

Their own arguments are an admission that only a small percentage of cars are uninsured. That minority is what we are concerned about. And if the owners of these uninsured cars asked for insurance, it is safe to say practically every one of them would get it. The private companies would accept their money with little ado.

It all comes down to whether the interests of private insurance companies mean more to members of the legislature than the right of every citizen to compensation for injuries for which they are not to be blamed.

It is strictly a case of private profits versus human rights.

Robert Marshall and Wife Stricken by Paralysis

Robert Marshall and wife, formerly residents of the Auxier Road, but who had been living at Samaria, Ky., are now in the home of their son, Winifred of Ashland, the victims of paralysis. Mrs. Marshall suffered a stroke sometime ago and six weeks later her husband was the victim of an identical attack. It was learned here this week. Both are bed-ridden.

Anxious relatives who visited them recently were Monroe Patton and wife of Alger, Ohio and Mrs. Gertrude Easley, of Harrod, Ohio.

Marshall was a teacher in Floyd county public schools for years.

Southern Rural Telephones Pass the Half Million Mark

THE number of rural telephones served by Southern Bell passed the 500,000 mark in 1951. More than 77,000 were added last year alone.

Even bigger things are planned for 1952, provided we can get the necessary materials. Many more Southern Bell lines are being built, the construction and money-saving advances in the long service. We are working hard to fill the demand and we expect to have another 87,000 rural telephones in service by the end of this year.

Meeting the demand for service is a big and costly job, but it's a job we must do because it's so important to the people who depend on them for the future.
